INFORMATION CARD

SUPPORTING INTEL

The estate vault was breached using shaped charges matched to the vault's specific construction – not a random burglary technique. The crew had insider architectural plans.

NEON RELIC • THE VERDANT COVENANT

I2

INFORMATION CARD

SUPPORTING INTEL

The thieves bypassed significant conventional valuables – silver, paintings, documents – and went directly to the subterranean vault. They knew exactly what they were after.

NEON RELIC • THE VERDANT COVENANT

I3

INFORMATION CARD

SUPPORTING INTEL

The operation was professionally financed through Compact cutouts. Wire transfers, equipment procurement, and crew payments all trace back to Vantablack financial infrastructure.

I4

INFORMATION CARD

♦ CONTAINMENT TRUTH

The estate vault was not merely a safe. It was a custody chamber – a ritual containment site maintained through a liturgical sequence passed down through the custodian family. Breaking the vault broke the containment.

NEON RELIC • THE VERDANT COVENANT

I5

INFORMATION CARD

SUPPORTING INTEL

Police have compiled a list of witnesses from the estate neighborhood who reported unusual activity the night of the theft – vehicles, shouting, and at least one person carried out on a stretcher.

NEON RELIC • THE VERDANT COVENANT

I6

INFORMATION CARD

SUPPORTING INTEL

One member of the heist crew was injured during the breach and fled separately. A blood trail and taxi records suggest a route toward La Boca district.

NEON RELIC • THE VERDANT COVENANT

I7

INFORMATION CARD

SUPPORTING INTEL

Hospital intake records show no matching admissions – suggesting the wounded thief sought unlicensed medical care. Street contacts may know where.

INFORMATION CARD

SUPPORTING INTEL

Witness descriptions and partial security footage produce fragmentary sketches of at least two crew members who did not match any known criminal profile – suggesting outside recruitment.

INFORMATION CARD

◆ CONTAINMENT TRUTH

The Spear is drawn to wound trauma, ideological certainty, righteous violence, and the proximity of anyone who believes themselves chosen. It does not merely react to these conditions — it seeks them out, intensifying conflict and conviction in its vicinity until a bearer emerges.

NEON RELIC • THE VERDANT COVENANT

I10

INFORMATION CARD

SUPPORTING INTEL

After wartime displacement, the relic was placed with the Ferreyra family under a quiet compromise. The Church maintained a monitoring role but never officially acknowledged the arrangement.

NEON RELIC • THE VERDANT COVENANT

I11

INFORMATION CARD

◆ CONTAINMENT TRUTH

The older containment record describes a substitute custody protocol: a specific sequence of shielding, silence, and liturgical actions required to move the Spear without triggering activation. The record is incomplete — key steps are missing or deliberately redacted.

NEON RELIC • THE VERDANT COVENANT

I12

INFORMATION CARD

SUPPORTING INTEL

The heist was funded by Sabine Voss through Vantablack Compact financial channels routed through the Cambio Cerrito currency exchange. Wire records, courier payments, and equipment invoices all converge.

The scheduled buyer handoff was meant to occur at a freight staging area but collapsed when the courier and the relic failed to arrive on time. The relic went sideways into someone else's hands.

The foreign buyer's requirements reveal whether they want the Spear as a proof-of-force weapon or as a symbolic legitimacy token. This distinction determines the urgency and nature of the export threat.

NEON RELIC • THE VERDANT COVENANT

I15

INFORMATION CARD

◆ CONTAINMENT TRUTH

The surviving thief exhibits wound bloom — injuries that reopen despite treatment, bleeding in patterns that echo the Spear's own wound history. This is the first direct evidence that the relic is active and affecting people in proximity.

◆ CONTAINMENT TRUTH

During and after the heist, one member of the crew began speaking in command-language: references to mandate, destiny, divine selection, and righteous authority. Consistent with claimant-language described in Covenant relic archives.
