L1 — Cormsil Village (General)

L1

DESCRIPTION	A farming town of 400 people in the Yorkshire Dales. One pub (The Dömere Arms — the pub has always been called that, no one knows why), one church (St. Cuthbert's, 12th century, built on older foundations), one library (burned), one school, scattered sheep farms. The village green has a medieval market cross. The atmosphere is tense — the town is divided between those calling the survival a miracle and those who are uneasy. The air feels heavier than it should.
AVAILABILITY	All shifts. The pub is open Day and Evening. The church is open Day and Evening. The library site is accessible any time (cordoned off, not guarded).
NPCS PRESENT	Various townsfolk. Tom Dwerryhouse (NPC2 — at the pub or his farm, L7). Mary Dwerryhouse (NPC4 — at the farm or visiting Eleanor). Margaret Hale (NPC5 — around town, drawn to the library). Reverend Paul Threlfall (NPC3 — at the church, L3).
INFORMATION	I1 (the town's history — medieval, Saxon foundations, pre-Saxon settlement nearby), I2 (the fire — what the town knows), I3 (the compact's existence — the glass case at the library). I6 (Dwerryhouse's notes) after O2M1.
ORGANIZATIONS	O1 (the returned are present throughout town), O2 (the skeptical townsfolk).

+ Positive: The town is small — everyone knows everything, and most are willing to talk if approached with respect. A Manipulate (Diff 1) or genuine interest in local history earns cooperation. The pub is the social hub — agents who buy a round will hear everything.

- Negative: Agents stand out. If they're aggressive, officious, or dismissive, the town closes ranks. The returned are everywhere — agents may encounter them before they're ready. Extended conversation with a returned is +1 Corruption.

L2 — The Burned Library

L2

DESCRIPTION	The remains of the Cormsil Public Library. A stone shell — the roof collapsed, the interior is ash and twisted shelving. The glass case that held the compact is visible in the reading room rubble: shattered, empty, but still labeled "Cormsil Compact, 1882 — On Permanent Loan from the Town Council." The smell of burnt paper and melted plastic lingers. The site is cordoned off with police tape but not guarded. The fire investigator's report is filed at the town council office.
AVAILABILITY	All shifts. The site is accessible — no guard, just tape. Night visits require a light source.
NPCS PRESENT	Possible: one of the returned (they're drawn to the site — they don't know why). Eleanor Vane (NPC1 — she visits sometimes; she doesn't know why either). After O1M2: the returned gather here every evening.
INFORMATION	I3 (the compact's existence confirmed — the glass case label, compact ash remnants), I5 (the compact's terms — partial; a fire-damaged copy was stored in the church), I7 (the fire investigator's report — confirms candle cause, notes "unexplained survivor behavior").
ORGANIZATIONS	O1 (the returned are drawn here). After O1M2: the returned gather here at dusk.

+ Positive: The site is accessible and physical evidence is intact. The glass case label is unambiguous — agents don't need a roll to confirm the compact existed. The fire investigator's report at the town council office provides objective confirmation of events.

- Negative: The returned are drawn here. Agents investigating the library will encounter at least one. The ash is unstable — a fumbled Investigate roll disturbs the debris and collapses part of a remaining wall (no damage, but attracts attention).

L3 — St. Cuthbert's Church and Crypt

L3

DESCRIPTION	A Norman church, 12th century, built on Saxon foundations. Stone walls, wooden pews, stained glass depicting local saints and agricultural scenes. The crypt is older — pre-Norman, possibly the original Saxon church floor. Accessed by stone stairs behind the vestry. The Society's manual is hidden behind a loose stone in the crypt's east wall, behind a wooden panel that hasn't been moved since 1882. The church vestry also holds parish records, including a fire-damaged partial copy of the compact.
AVAILABILITY	Church: Day and Evening shifts. Crypt: accessible with the vicar's permission or via Sneak (Diff 2 — the stairs are stone and sound carries). Night access requires infiltration.
NPCS PRESENT	Reverend Paul Threlfall (NPC3 — the current vicar. A good man who knows something is spiritually wrong in his parish and doesn't know what to do about it. He's been praying for guidance. The agents showing up feels like an answer.)
INFORMATION	I9 (the Society's manual — behind the loose stone in the crypt), I5 (the fire-damaged compact copy — stored in the church vestry, partial but legible: describes "annual acknowledgment" and "the sleeping arrangement").
ORGANIZATIONS	None. The church is neutral ground.

+ Positive: Reverend Threlfall is an unconditional ally. He believes the agents are an answer to prayer. He'll give them access to the crypt and the vestry, share the fire-damaged compact copy, and tell them about the loose stone ("the old vicar's hiding spot — my predecessor's predecessor mentioned it, but I never looked"). A Manipulate roll is not required.

- Negative: The manual is hidden well. Finding it without the vicar's help requires an Investigate roll (Diff 2). The crypt is unsettling — +1 Corruption for extended time below ground. If agents are hostile to Threlfall or dismiss his faith, he withdraws access to the crypt.

L4 — Eleanor Vane's Cottage

L4

DESCRIPTION	A small stone cottage on the edge of Cormsil, surrounded by an overgrown garden — Eleanor hasn't tended it since the fire. The curtains are drawn. Inside: tidy, quiet, oppressive. Books everywhere — Eleanor was a librarian for 30 years. A clock ticks too loudly. Eleanor sits in her armchair in the front room. She doesn't move much. She's waiting for the next visit. The air in the cottage is stale and heavy — the windows haven't been opened in weeks.
AVAILABILITY	Day and Evening shifts. Eleanor rarely leaves. She'll answer the door — she's desperate for someone to talk to who isn't one of the returned.
NPCS PRESENT	Eleanor Vane (NPC1). Possible: one of the returned may be visiting — they come daily. After 04M2: Eleanor is catatonic for hours at a time, then writes compulsively.
INFORMATION	I4 (Eleanor's testimony — the fire, the returned, the visits, her deterioration). After 04M2: I11 ("The stone is warm" — Eleanor's channeled message from the Dömere).
ORGANIZATIONS	O4 (Eleanor). O1 may be present (a returned visiting).

+ Positive: Eleanor is the most honest witness in Cormsil. She tells the agents everything — the candle, the fire, the people running into the woods, the daily visits, the way they "forgive" her. A Psychoanalyze roll (Diff 1) reveals she's not suicidal — she's being kept awake by forces she can't name. She's a witness, not an enemy. She'll help agents however she can.

- Negative: She's also the most fragile person in Cormsil. Pushing her too hard causes collapse — she becomes catatonic and unavailable for 1 shift. The returned visit frequently — agents may encounter one here. Extended conversation with a returned is +1 Corruption. The cottage is oppressive — +1 Corruption for scenes longer than 1 shift.

L5 — The Bodleian Library, Oxford

L5

DESCRIPTION	The manuscript reading room of one of the world's oldest libraries. Wood-paneled, silent, smelling of old paper and leather. The vicar's papers are held here — Arthur Hailes, Vicar of Cormsil, 1876-1891: his personal correspondence, parish records, and a sealed letter to the Bishop of Ripon dated 1883. The letter describes the 1882 compact and The Society in cautious, uncomfortable terms. Also includes a reference to "the volume I have hidden, which I was instructed to return and did not."
AVAILABILITY	Day shifts only. Reading room hours: 9 AM to 5 PM. Reader's card required — can be arranged through Covenant academic affiliate Dr. Alderson (University of York) or obtained on-site with credentials (Manipulate Diff 2). Travel: 2 shifts from Cormsil.
NPCS PRESENT	Manuscript librarian (civilian — helpful, academic, protective of the collection).
INFORMATION	110 (the vicar's summary of the compact terms — acknowledgment, annual ritual, the spirit's acceptance). 115 (the vicar's letter — mentions The Society, the hidden manual, and the vicar's unease). CT-1 partial source (confirms the compact's function).
ORGANIZATIONS	O3 (The Society's Trail — activates if agents discover the first Society reference here).

+ Positive: The vicar's papers are accessible with standard academic credentials. A Lore or Investigate (Diff 2) extracts all relevant information. The manuscript librarian is helpful to serious researchers. The letter confirms the manual was hidden deliberately — not lost, but left.

- Negative: The letter is sealed. Opening it requires the librarian's permission (Manipulate Diff 2) or stealth (Sneak Diff 2). If agents damage the seal, the librarian is displeased — Oxford takes its manuscripts seriously. Access may be revoked. A fumbled roll costs 1 additional shift as agents navigate bureaucracy.

DESCRIPTION	Manuscript collection. Sir Geoffrey Colne's "Of Certain Subterranean Presences in the County of York" (1642) — a leather-bound folio. Colne was a 17th-century antiquarian who documented folklore, strange occurrences, and "things the Church prefers not to acknowledge." His manuscript describes the Dömere, records a failed 1642 binding attempt, and includes — in the margins, in a different hand — an Old English riddle that encodes the spirit's true name. The manuscript is fragile; careful handling is required.
AVAILABILITY	Day shifts only. Reading room hours. Reader's card required. Travel: 3 shifts from Cormsil, 2 shifts from Oxford.
NPCS PRESENT	Manuscript librarian (civilian — professional, helpful).
INFORMATION	Il3 (the Dömere's nature and history — pre-Celtic, the one who remembers wrongs, called "Dömere" by the Saxons), Il7 (the failed 1642 binding — what went wrong, what Colne learned), Il8 (the riddle — encoding the true name "Dömere" — essential for the silencing ritual). CT-1 full source. CT-2 partial source.
ORGANIZATIONS	None.

+ Positive: Colne's manuscript is the Rosetta Stone for this case. It identifies the spirit, explains its function, and provides the silencing ritual framework. A Lore or Investigate (Diff 2) extracts everything. The riddle is solvable — an Old English kenning that, when translated, yields "Dömere" (the Doomer, the Judge).

- Negative: The riddle is in Old English. If no agent reads Old English, the librarian can arrange translation — this adds +1 shift but guarantees accuracy. The manuscript is fragile — a fumbled roll damages a page; the riddle becomes partially illegible, adding +1 Diff to the silencing ritual. Travel time from Cormsil is significant (3 shifts).

L7 — The Standing Stone (Climax Site)

L7

DESCRIPTION	A weathered standing stone in a sheep field half a mile from Cormsil. Pre-Saxon — likely Brigantes. The farmer who owns the field (Tom Dwerryhouse, NPC2) has noticed the stone is warm. It's never been warm before. The soil around it is darker. The grass within a 2-meter radius has died. This is the Dömere's original resting place — where the Celts dug their ritual well, where the Saxons found it, where the church was built to contain it, where the compact was read aloud for 105 years. The well is still here — capped with a Saxon stone slab, overgrown, invisible unless you know where to look. The air around the stone hums at the edge of hearing. Birds avoid the radius.
AVAILABILITY	All shifts. The field is Dwerryhouse's — he'll grant access if he trusts the agents (O2M1 or successful Manipulate). Without his permission, agents must trespass (Sneak Diff 1 — it's a sheep field, not a military base).
NPCs PRESENT	Possible: Tom Dwerryhouse (NPC2 — he checks the stone daily now). Margaret Hale (NPC5 — after O1M3, if she's volunteered, she'll meet agents here). During the ritual: the returned will converge on the site (arrive in 1 shift after the ritual begins).
INFORMATION	I19 (the standing stone's significance — the pre-Saxon site, warm stone, dead grass), I20 (the well — the Dömere's access point to the surface, the Saxon cap). CT-3 partial source (the soil is required for the ritual).
ORGANIZATIONS	O1 (the returned will converge here during the ritual). The spirit's presence is strongest here — +2 Corruption per scene.

+ Positive: The site is accessible and Dwerryhouse is cooperative (if agents are straight with him). The ritual can be performed here — all three components converge at this location. The well is findable (Investigate Diff 1 — the Saxon cap is visible once you know what to look for). Soil extraction is straightforward — dig beneath the stone's base.

- Negative: The Dömere resists. Performing the ritual causes +2 Corruption for all participants. The returned will converge on the site — agents must hold them off (not violently — they're civilians, but they're compelled) while the ritual completes. If the volunteer loses their nerve, the ritual fails. The spirit speaks directly into the agents' minds, cataloguing their own negligent acts, demanding to know why they deserve to judge it. The standing stone may crack if the ritual goes wrong — cosmetic but terrifying.
